

6516206485.txt

Satellite radio represents a present and future-based technology. It should be the function of the government to nurture this type of free enterprise effort, not stifle it in favor of old, established business models. Users of both satellite radio and television pay for the service and the viability of the service should be determined by the marketplace, not government intervention.